

JAMES ADAMS

Electric Cities of Georgia (ECG) Training & Safety Specialist

With over 34 years of electrical linework experience, James Adams stands as a pillar of expertise and leadership in the industry. As a Training & Safety Specialist with Electric Cities of Georgia (ECG), he plays an essential role in equipping and assisting municipalities across Georgia with training, safety, and emergency response.

James is a highly certified instructor and a key member of the Safety-First Task Force, making him a vital leader in training and emergency response. When Hurricane Helene devastated the City of Douglas, causing a complete shutdown of its distribution and transmission lines, James was on the front lines. His expertise and leadership were instrumental in restoring power, as he coordinated morning briefings, analyzed one-line diagrams, directed crews, and managed schedules to ensure a smooth and efficient recovery process.

With unwavering commitment, James remained in Douglas for 14 days, working tirelessly until the majority of the distribution system was restored—demonstrating the vital role ECG and its training specialists play in safeguarding Georgia's municipal utilities.
